How to provide good feedback is an interactive questionnaire whose purpose is to enable students, via self-analysis, to learn about how they provide feedback. Based on these results, they can then adapt their behaviour to those situations that require effective feedback.

The learning objectives are the following:

- Get to know individual personal feedback styles
- Learn how to provide good feedback
The questionnaire contains six questions. Students should select the answer that best describes them. Their answer should be based on how they normally behave or how they believe they would behave in each situation, and not how they believe they should behave.
Once students complete the questionnaire, they receive the results and those of the rest of the group.
